In this case, the server 320 is acting as both the user agent and the first transfer agent. Acting in its capacity as a user agent, the server will generate the electronic mail message to be transferred. In this embodiment of the invention, the electronic mail message will be generated from two sources of information. The first source is an advertisement from an advertisement database 330. In one embodiment of the present invention, the advertisement databases will have separate advertisements for each language supported by the present invention. The second source will be information about the prospective client from a prospective client database 310. In one embodiment, the server of an automated system can read information about a user's language from the client database 330. From this information about the user, the server can then choose from the selection of different language versions of the advertisement in the advertisement database, the appropriate version to be sent to the users. This advertisement can then be written to the body of an electronic mail message." and insert the same on Col. 4, line 40 as a new paragraph.
